I was a passenger in the Liverpool packet, Caledonia, on her last voyage to New York, and of necessity became a wincess to the general demeanor of Mr. Lee, during that period wherein he is stated by Mr. Anderson, to have conducted himself in a manner unbecoming a gentleman and a man of principle. I observed from the outset of the voyage, that Mr. Lee rathier avoided the georetic of Mr. Lees and the state of the voyage, that Mr. Lee rathier avoided the georetic of Mr. Anderson, and owing to a small affair that occurred shortly after our saining, their intercourse was whelly broken off. content that opinions however strange, and partialities however absurd, should be enjoyed by their possessors, without molestation either frozenson or riducule; yet for our own proper satisfaction we require in a production that taxe our time, and claims our commendation, some few material, but much neglected requisites.—For example, we expect that it be in sentiment not wholly false nor flatly absurd, and in diction somewhat intelligible, and occasionally accordant with the desposed rules of grammar. We can didly confess, however, that it is seldom that these expectations are realized, and to notice the extent to which laws so very lenient are viorated would surprise the reader, and certainly give much pain to ourselves.

It would require more space than we can at present devote to this subject, to present the extent of the form of the first particular—the sentiment or style of thought—in most of the fugritive articles of the day, it is strained and unnatural, or feeble and commonplace. Indeed, in many cases, it is difficult to discover what is the sentiment, for in compliance with the perverted state of the times, the thought is so loaded with the gorgeousness of gothic adornment—so bedizzened with spangles and flowers—that it is a difficult to find, as a lady concealed amid the "void immense" of bishops severs.

But the besetting and most unpardonable aim four rhymsters is affectation. Under the in or the first particular—the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the prevented state of the times, the thought—in most of the fugritive articles of the day it is strained and unnatural, or feeble and commonplace. Indeed, in many cases, it is difficult to find, as a lady concealed amid the "void immense" of bishops sheeted. The sun-dial was invented by Papirius Cursor, 230 years before Christ. It was long after the invention of dash before mankind began to form any idea of clocks, nor is it known at what period they were first invented. A clock was presented to Pepin, King of France, by Pope Paul I. about 1009 years ago, which was supposed to be the only one is the world.

A Great Impourment,—George Welsh, Esq. of Gettysburgh, Pa. has nearly completed a Steam Engine, intended for the propulsion of Rail Road Cars, on a new principle, which, in the opinion of some of our best engineers, promines to surpass any hitherto invented. It is simple, neat, and compact, occupying a space so small as to little incommode an ordinary car.— The experiments already made with it, exhibit a velocity equal to thirty miles an hour. And, is in perhaps of importance, not less in value pishment of the grand desideration of consuming the smoke, which it most effectually does. A gentleman, of large experience in the department of science, and who has witnessed most of the experiments instituted in Europe and our own country, declares this the most interesting he has seen, and cherishes the hope that it will crown with success the utmost expectations of its worthy and talented inventor—Baltimore the common sewers of London; there they live as in streets below man, and from thence the levies are made in thousands for the supply of the pit at Westminater. A story is told, that, some years since, four prisoners in Newgate, under sentence if death, managed to descead from the water closet into a sewer, having formed the daring project of proceeding along it until they got to the Thames; but by the time they got as far as Fleet Market, they were besieged by such legions of rats, that the unhappy men were compelled in their agony to scream for assistance: and people having heard them, opened the grates and hoisted them up, when they were conducted back to the place from whence they came. The men who enter the sewers to clean and repair them carry lights,
